WHILE DAHLIAS BLOOM

While dahlias bloom each Suffolk lane
Flames with your golden grace again:

Love piles the wasted years entire
To build a blazing crimson pyre
For all the failures, all the pain;

And the old dreams once more attain
The heights your constancy made plain;
Hope and Eternity conspire
While dahlias bloom.

What if the flares of summer wane
'Neath winter snows? No venture's vain,
Nor derelict all youth's desire;
The spring is wombed in autumn's fire;
No doubts the Infinite arraign
While dahlias bloom.

THE POMPON or BOUQUET DAHLIA

Named from the French word signifying ornament for headdress, in military parlance "tuft," because of its resemblance to the ball of wool worn on the shakos of the Voltigeurs in 1800 and adopted later by English regiments, changing into the shaving brush adorning the headgear of the French infantry of the line of 1850. The name of this variety has many variations, Stredwick insisting on PomPom, West Pompon, and one of our American growers Ponpon. This is the best all-round class for every purpose, exceedingly floriferous, unbeatable for a border because of its low growth—about 2 feet—and closely formed bush, unexcelled for Bouquet and vase work, and running the range of every color shade found in the larger classes. We are great rosters for this class and grow more varieties of it than any other grower in the world.

Flowers of this type for show purposes should be double ball shaped rather than flat, full to center, petals quilled or with rolled-in edges, rounded tops and less than 2 inches in diameter. For commercial flowers size, color and stem well branched with foliage close up to flower is desirable, the small exhibition pom with long clean stem being absolutely valueless, as they bunch poorly, and look too measly to appeal to the florist, all of whom prefer a flat flower of not less than two inches.

The best of the English varieties are still unbeatable, though many of the new Californian pompoms are exquisite. For a dark one LITTLE MARY, originated by an English woman in 1902 is still No. 1, and NERISSA, catalogued by Turner in 1895 has never yet been approached. Unfortunately this charming pompon has been impersonated by nearly every other so-called pink in cultivation.

DAHLIAS

Very few of the dahlias brought out in the last ten years (their names would fill a tidy sized lexicon) will be remembered a decade from birth, and most of them, even now, are deadlier than the dodo. I am sure it would puzzle me to name half the new varieties I bought for trial, even three years ago, and a perusal of the 1925 and 1929 catalogues of one well known dahlia grower astounded me with the number of new $10.00 dahlias of 1925 that were absent from the list of 1929. Too bad! But "those whom the Gods love die young." Each year I renew hope and enthusiasm and gather scores of loudly heralded varieties for trial, and each Autumn I sadly mark so many of them for extinction. If I listed all of the varieties I have bought and grown during the past ten years, my catalogue would be a very cumbersome thing, and if I grew them in quantity I should have to go west and acquire a few sections of cheaper land. All dahlias are beautiful, but beauty alone is not enough to permit a dahlia's entry into the company of the fit. Today all dahlias are judged by a standard set when the greatest of all dahlias, JERSEY'S BEAUTY, was introduced. Dahlias come and dahlias go, but JERSEY'S BEAUTY goes on, year after year, adding to the thousands of its offspring, planted wherever the dahlia, as a cut flower, is in demand. Each year new ones come in, their heralds blowing a loud trumpet, their Barnums ballyhooing each attribute, always promising some new color of the JERSEY'S BEAUTY type, some or all of its characteristics. Systems of ratings that are no ratings, at all, but merely the irresponsible guesswork of hopeful salesmanship, pin 95 and more on varieties that would stagger under a load of 75, but always the greatest of all dahlias is the criterion. Other dahlias beat JERSEY'S BEAUTY in the show room now and then but even in this year of grace 1929 none of the new varieties received greater admiration than the many baskets of Waite's wonderful dahlia that were much in evidence at every exhibition I attended. A few flowers of many varieties receive greater acclaim because the originators or exhibitors concentrate on producing a bloom or two especially for the show, but when the summing up for the year is done, it's a safe bet that JERSEY'S BEAUTY has done more to make the dahlia the great American garden flower than all other varieties combined, and in the wholesale flower markets thousands of dozens of JERSEY'S BEAUTY sell where even ten dozen of most new and high priced dahlias would be a glut. JERSEY'S BEAUTY has whatever the florist demands, IT, and brings a higher price, year in, year out, than any other dahlia, and it is probably far in the future when this will not be so. With all this in mind one is apt to be a stern judge, but harshness is always tempered by self interest, and I am sure I would not discard anything that cost good money to buy and grow if I thought it would pay. I winced each time I chop the discarded seedling close to the ground with a cornknife, and as I grow thousands each year, and seldom get one worth keeping, I have winced enough for one lifetime. This season, out of several 500-foot rows planted 375 plants to the row, I have three roots for retrial in 1930. So the following list of dahlias I have selected from those tried during the past three years I add to my catalogue with the assurance that, though they are not equal in every way to JERSEY'S BEAUTY, each is good enough to be worthy a place in any garden, or a part of any company in the show room. After perusing reports coming in from customers all over the United States as well as half a world away, under a wide variety of climate and conditions, I dare to assert that each one in the list is a good dahlia. And in passing I would like to add that because many really good dahlias do not show their best during the first season in a new section of the country, it is good practice for all dahlia lovers to buy the varieties they desire in their own locality. Prices for the standard and new varieties are on a fairly even basis all over the country, and one gets, as a rule, what one pays for. By buying from a dahlia farm near or within easy reach, one can choose the desired varieties in the field after a visit or two, and be sure that each one chosen does well under the climatic conditions it will have to meet.

And do not throw up your hands in horror when you see a dahlia listed at $50.00 per tuber. It is undoubtedly cheap. If one remembers that maybe an acre of land was used, 5,000 dahlia clumps discarded, and hundreds of dollars worth of time and much money expended parading the rows, selecting, classifying, examining for habits, faults, color, day after day, and that two more years must pass before the worthy seedling is proved fit to be named and sold, then one must concede any price charged is still too low to reward the introducer. And after all, supply and demand governs prices, and I myself have always gladly paid the price the originator demanded when his "baby" was nearly as good as he thought it and thanked my stars that the days of Holland's Tulip bubble and England's Potato balloon were behind me, and that dahlia growers were more reasonable and altruistic.

NEVER A PENNY TO SPEND.

The fairies have never a penny to spend,
They haven't a thing put by;
But theirs is a dower of bird and of flower
And theirs are the earth and the sky.
And though you should live in a palace of gold
Or sleep in a dried up ditch,
You could never be poor as the fairies are—
And never as rich.

Since ever and ever the world began
They have danced like a ribbon of flame;
They have sung their song through the centuries long
And yet it is never the same.
And though you be foolish or though you be wise,
With hair of silver or gold,
You could never be young as the fairies are—
And never as old.

THE GLADIOLUS

No longer a small sword, but a rapier of glory reflecting every possible combination of the colors in the spectrum, the "poor man's orchid" lends itself more easily and satisfactorily to home and garden decoration than any other flower.

Native to South Africa, from where it spread north through the tropics to Europe, and Western Asia, even growing in its wild state as far from the Veldt as The New Forest and the Isle of Wight, this glorious "sword of gladness" has advanced wonderfully since Mr. Colville fathered his hybrids in his Chelsea nursery. How great the advance has been can be best realized by comparing the efforts of Kunderd, Kemp, Diener, Coleman, etc., and many European hybridizers with the natural species, seen only in botanical collections today.

The new hybrids from the South African Primulinus, exquisitely graceful with their long, slim spikes, and dainty arrangement of flower, in every shade of sulphur, bronze, copper, saffron, apricot and rose, are to my mind the best of all. There is no scheme of decoration to which they will not add beauty.

The gladiolus is a flower of easy culture, and does well in any soil, but requires an open front to the sunlight. Planted in the hardy border, or edging a wall of shrubbery, in round, oblong and square bed, or whether raising their stately heads from a permanent planting of perennials or a summer bed of annuals, the "Glad" lends itself to any combination, even when dominating the entire garden.

For ordinary culture plant in rows or clumps with four inches between the corms, if in rows, doubling up is best, with twenty-four inches between rows for field culture, and eighteen inches for hand working, and in ordinary soil about six inches deep is right. A good potato fertilizer, 5x8x10, applied at planting time or after, at the rate of 1500 lbs. per acre, will add length to spike and color to the flower, and as the Gladiolus responds quickly to good treatment, there is no excuse for not producing flowers of high quality. The corms will flower in ten to fourteen weeks from planting and the period of blooming can be extended until frost by putting a few in the ground each week until July 10th.

In the Fall, when yellow foliage denotes maturity, the corms should be lifted, the tops cut off, and the corms laid in a dry, airy place to cure. At the end of a week or ten days the old corm can be removed, and the new ones placed in a flat and store in a cool, frost proof place for the winter.

If you have never grown this beautiful flower, buy a hundred or so of Best Mixture, and begin this spring.

Grow "GLADS" and be Glad. Ideal Mixture $4.00 per 100 P. P.

PEONIES

The Peony, like the Rose, can be traced back to ancient times, but the species PAEONIA ALBIFLORA (so popular to-day), or, as it is commonly known, the Chinese Peony, is of modern development.

The species OFFICINALIS is indigenous to Europe, and it is probably this class which is referred to in the writings of the ancient Greeks, and concerning which there were so many peculiar and superstitious legends.

So far as can be learned, the Albiflora type, with which we are most concerned, did not reach Europe or America until early in the nineteenth century. It appears that at first there was little general and determined effort made to improve this species, but toward the middle of this period the French hybridists (the most skillful in the world) enthusiastically took hold of this flower with results that are little short of marvelous; as is shown in the varieties we possess to-day.

Concerning the naming of this flower, Dr. Coit very interestingly relates:

"It is the species officinalis which probably secured for the genus its name. The genus Paeonia was so named by the ancients in honor of Paeon, a physician, who cured the wounds received by the heathen gods during the Trojan war. The ancient writers, who transformed simple facts into fabulous histories for the purpose of deifying favorite mortals, relate that Paeon, who was a pupil of the great Aesculapius, first received the peony on Mt. Olympus from the hands of the mother of Apollo, with which he cured Pluto of a wound he had received from Hercules, but this cure caused so much jealousy in the breast of Aesculapius that he secretly caused the death of Paeon. Pluto, however, retaining a grateful sense of his service, changed him into the flower which ever after bore his name." In olden times this plant was supposed to have medicinal value, and it appears that it was also the subject of much absurd superstition. Dr. Coit states: "Antiquity celebrates the virtues of this plant and places it among the wonders of the vegetable garden. Fable gives us its origin, Aesculapius its properties, and superstition ranks it among miraculous plants, assuring that demons will fly the spot where it is planted, and that even a small piece of root worn around the neck is sufficient to protect the wearer from all kinds of enchantment. The ancient Greeks when digging up the plant were careful to do so at night only, as it was said that if anyone attempted to meddle with it in the daytime the green woodpecker, which the gods had assigned to the plant as a protection, would dart at the eyes of the intruder."

PLANTING

The Peony is of such easy culture that there is little to be said by way of introduction as to planting. Peonies respond nobly to liberal culture. Prepare your ground well, working up deep rich soil with a good quantity of bonemeal incorporated, and you will be well repaid by the increased size of blooms and the general vigor of the plants. It is best to avoid the use of animal fertilizer. The root should be set in the ground with the topmost "eyes" about three inches below the surface of the soil, and the ground well firmed around it—using care not to damage the tender buds. For permanent planting Peonies should be set from three to four feet apart each way, and left undisturbed indefinitely. When it is desired to intersperse Peonies among other hardy garden flowers, or at intervals along a border of shrubs, they should be planted in groups of from three to five, each group to be of one variety. In arranging a bed of Peonies of from fifteen to fifty roots—according to the space at command—we strongly urge the planting of one variety. For while sorts may be had that bloom in theory about the same time, the result is never satisfactory, as they come straggling into bloom one after the other and the effect desired is never wholly gained. A bed of one fine sort is a magnificent sight.

It is a pity—for the sake of the Peony—that when the fall sets in the great majority of people forget about flowers and their gardens and turn to other things, for the fall season is the only season in which the Peony should be moved. We have discontinued spring shipments and supply roots only in the fall. To move Peonies at any other season means a set-back from which the roots sometimes do not recover for two years. Prices quoted are for strong 3 to 5-eye divisions.

HARDY PHLOX

These beautiful, hardy border plants are among the most effective things in the garden during the late Summer and Autumn. They have been greatly improved in both size and color during late years; will do well in almost any position or soil, though they respond grandly to extra care and cultivation. Water during blooming season for extra fine flowers, divide every four years, cut blooms plentifully and do not allow to go to seed.

Our list is confined to the very best of the many varieties offered, each a strong grower with immense panicles of individual flowers unsurpassed for size and color.

ANTONIN MERDIE. Light ground color prettily suffused bluish lilac.

AUSTRALIA. Bright claret red, large flower.

BEACON. Brilliant cherry red.

BRIDESMAID. Pure white with crimson carmine center.

CHAMPS ELYSEE. A very bright rosy-magenta.

COMMANDER. Beautiful. New. Crimson-red with darker eye. The most striking of Phloxes.

EUROPA. A pure white with a very decided crimson carmine eye, large flowers on good compact trusses.

FIREBRAND. Bright vermilion-scarlet, with deeper center, large, strong trusses.

FLORA J. RIEDY. A new pure white of sturdy upright growth, free branching habit and enormous panicles of bloom, and heavy exceptionally dark green foliage. 50c.

JEANNE D'ARC. A good standard late white.

JULES SANDEAU. Large, fine, very free flowering; pure watermelon pink; rapid grower; one of the best varieties in cultivation.

KARL FOERSTER. An improved "Coquelicot" whose color has never been equaled in red phloxes. This newer variety combines the brilliancy of the older variety, a rich growing orange-scarlet, with large trusses of flowers carried on strong upright stems. 50c.

LA VAGUE. An improvement over older varieties of similar color, with immense conical heads, born in great profusion. Warm mauve with emphatic carmine eye.

L'ESPERANCE. Light lavender pink with white center.

MRS. JENKINS. The best of tall early white for massing.

PAINTED LADY. This delicate colored sort is one of the most pleasing in our entire collection. Strong upright growth and large masses of flower heads. Silver pink, with salmon shading and cherry red eye. 50c.

PROFESSOR VIRCHOW. Bright carmine overlaid with brilliant orange-scarlet.

RHEINLANDER. A most beautiful salmon pink.

RIVERTON JEWEL. One of our own introductions. A lovely mauve-rose illuminated by a brilliant carmine-red eye.

R. P. STRUTHERS. Bright rosy carmine with claret-red eye.

RYNSTROM. Fine for massing, of a Paul Neyron rose color.

SIR EDWIN LANDSEER. Very bright crimson; large trusses and vigorous, healthy growth.

THOR.—A most beautiful and lively shade of deep salmon-pink suffused and overlaid with a scarlet glow.

VESUVIUS. Bright rich carmine with salmon suffusion blood red eye.

WIDAR. Light, reddish-violet with a large white center, which intensifies and illuminates the color.

Except where noted, 25c each.

IRISES

Irises are frequently referred to as the "Rainbow Flowers," because of their wide range of color. As delicate in form and in color harmony as the orchid, they are, however, quite easily grown and are perfectly hardy.

They require a dry, sunny location, where the soil is at all times well drained. A wet soil will cause the root to decay, as will standing water in the winter. Plant them with the rhizome barely covered and the rootlets well spread out, then firm the earth well around them. If the soil is dry when planting, put water in the hole or trench but do not water again until growth has started. Never allow manure to come into contact with the rhizome; if a fertilizer is required, crushed limestone, hardwood ashes or bone meal in small quantities may be stirred in around the roots, at the same time being careful not to touch the leaves with it. Drought after the blooming season is beneficial as that is the dormant season when transplantings can be made most successfully.

Irises can be transplanted with success in our climate at any time of the year when the soil is not frozen, providing the leaves are cut back and we will ship accordingly, although we prefer to ship in July and August when most of our own transplanting is being done.

PRICES quoted are for one rhizome, which under usual conditions should bloom the following spring, and are post-age prepaid, subject to stock being unsold upon receipt of order.

Where no American Iris Society ratings appear, the variety has not as yet been voted upon. As a general thing the ratings are a decided help in judging a flower, but are not infallible in that tastes differ.

Dahlias

Vanquished by the threat of night,
Spreading wild wings the day takes flight,
Pledging the armies of the light
 Not to surrender;
And in our west'ring world appear
Dahlias, the sunset of the year
Kindling the misty atmosphere
 To sudden splendor.

Soon will the summer leaves be tossed
Where summer's memories are lost,
And, bound in iron bands of frost
 The earth will harden;
But in this final hour they gleam,
Banners of glory, to redeem
The lingering hostages of dream
 In summer's garden.

Not only do our eyes behold
Their pageantry of red and gold
Now, when the firelight shudders cold
 With fears unspoken;
But shining centuries will rout
The hazes of autumnal doubt
While proudly summer marches out
 Her ranks unbroken.

Recessional in robes of power;
A sunset folded in a flower
 With sullen warning,
After the snow; a prophecy
To rive the bonds of night, and free
 Another morning.

ROBERT HILLYER.
